Look at the illustration below. What do you see? Some people might see a rabbit ①( face ) to the right, while others might see a duck ①( face ) to the left. This illustration shows ( ② ) our eyes can be tricked, what is called an optical illusion. ③Such illusions have been used in various ways which we can see in our daily lives. ( ④ ), one example is the manner in which they have historically been incorporated into structural designs. The karesansui (dry landscape) garden at the Zen temple Ryōanji in Kyoto illustrates such a use. ⑤Its surface may look completely level, but actually, it inclines towards the garden's south-east corner. Also, the west-side earthen wall is slightly higher at its northern end. These factors create an optical illusion ⑥( look / this / makes / deeper / that / surface ). This effect is the same as the one seen in the Ponzo Illusion, in ( ⑦ ) the horizontal line closer to the top looks longer than the line below it, even ( ⑧ ) the two are exactly the same length.
